Content

Chapter 1  Introduction
1.1 The researcher’s personal interest in the subject  5
1.2 The background and the focus of the study  5
1.3 The need for research  6
1.4 The research question and the aims of the study  6
1.5 The significance of the study  6
1.6 The methodology in use  7
1.7 Limitations of the study  7
1.8 Summary  8

Chapter 2  Literature review
2.1 Definition of leadership  9
2.2 Leadership versus management  9
2.3 The need for advanced leadership skill in nursing  10
2.4 Influential factors which are conducive to the development of a nurse for the leadership role  11
2.5 Separation of the private and professional self  11
2.6 Qualities of successful leader  12
2.7 Summary  15

Chapter 3  Methodology and method
3.1 Reasons for the choice of methodology  16
3.2 Phenomenology in general  16
3.3 The Vancouver School of Doing Phenomenology  17
3.4 Selection of the sample  18
3.5 Informed consent in qualitative research  18
3.6 The dialogue and attitude to co-researchers  19
3.7 Consideration regarding influences on co-researchers  19
3.8 Trustworthiness of phenomenological studies  20

Chapter 4  Data collection and analysis
4.1 Access to the site and/or to the respondents  21
4.2 Permission to collect data  21
4.3 Ethical issues in implementation of the study  22
4.4 Selection of the sample  22
4.5 The setting  23
4.6 Data gathering methods  23
4.7 Data analysis  24
4.8 The process of writing up the findings  25

Chapter 5 Findings
5.1 Thoughts on the leadership role and presentation of the analytical framework constructed in the study  26
5.2 Personality strengths  27
5.2A Knowledge of own strengths 28
5.2B Previous experience and knowledge 29
5.2C Ability to be caring 30
5.2D Conscious use of humour 30
5.3 Communication 31
5.3A Ability and conscious measured to put important messages across 31
5.3B Care devoted to being an active listener 32
5.3C Honesty and truthfulness in all communications 33
5.3D Flexibility in communications, together with the ability to set boundaries 34
5.4 Separation of the private and professional self 35
5.4A Loyalty to the job, the profession and the institution 35
5.4B Collaboration and collegiality 37
5.4C Appropriate closeness and distance vis-à-vis co-workers 38
5.4D Self-nurturing 38
5.5 The working environment 40
5.5A Interest and courage to work for change, and to make innovations 40
5.5B Ability to encourage and activate co-workers 41
5.5C Influence to deal with imbalance, stress and strain 42
5.5D Being present, accompanied by the special ability to let the working environment continue to function during absences 43
5.6 Summary 43

Chapter 6 Discussion 45
6.1 Elements relating to strengths of character 45
6.2 Elements relating to communication skills 46
6.3 Elements relating to separation of the private and professional self 47
6.4 Elements relating to the working environment 49
6.5 Conclusion of the discussion 51
6.6 Trustworthiness of the study 51
6.7 Usefulness of the study 52
6.8 Suggestion for further research 52
6.9 Epilogue 52

References 54

Appendices:
Appendix 1
A letter to the chief director of nursing at the University Hospital, requesting consent for carrying out the study

Appendix 2
Consent for carrying out the study, from the chief director of nursing at the University Hospital

Appendix 3
Letter to the scientific ethics committee of the University Hospital, requesting formal consent for carrying out the study

Appendix 4
Letter from the scientific ethics committee of the University Hospital, requesting further information on methodology and implementation

Appendix 5
Letter to the scientific ethics committee of the University Hospital, containing further information as requested

Appendix 6
Consent of the scientific ethics committee of the University Hospital for carrying out the study

Appendix 7
Letter to prospective co-researchers

Appendix 8
Informed consent form

Appendix 9
Secretary’s declaration of confidentiality